

ABSTRACT

A method for predicting transformer performance includes receiving information representative of a plurality of built transformers, the information comprising a design specification for each built transformer, and measured test information for each built transformer, receiving a second transformer design specification, and determining, via an intelligent system, a predicted test result for the second transformer design specification based on the second transformer design specification and the information representative of the plurality of built transformers.